DETAILS:

Your neighbors have reduced their disposal costs and created valuable soil amendments by taking advantage of the flexibility offered by the recently updated County zoning ordinance, which has simplified onsite composting for managing organic materials generated on and off-site. Now, after this update:

- Residents can share materials with neighbors and manage their own materials.
- Farms can work with other farms to share materials, compost, and set up community composting operations.

If you haven't started composting yet, are looking for a neighbor who will accept your organic materials, or need compost for your plants or crops, don't miss this important networking opportunity!

In addition to a demonstration of how the host ranch composts manure from more than 30 horses and other animals for onsite use, discussions on best management practices and potential return on investment, the workshop will also cover topics on plants for pollinators, nurturing habitats and more!
