

IMPROVING THE SAN DIEGO CITIZENS' INITIATIVE PROCESS

Democracy cannot succeed unless those who express their choice are prepared to choose wisely. The real safeguard of democracy, therefore, is education.

Franklin Delano Roosevelt

SUMMARY

The 2017/2018 San Diego Grand Jury (Grand Jury) undertook an analysis of the San Diego citizens' initiative process. The process allows California voters to bypass legislative bodies and enact laws directly. The Grand Jury's investigation revealed that, depending upon the complexity of the subject; voters have a low level of awareness of the issues presented by initiatives. As a consequence, many voters do not vote on initiatives or vote based on inadequate information.

Following an investigation of the initiative process, the policies and practices of governmental entities concerning initiatives, and the sources of information available to the voters about issues raised by initiatives, the Grand Jury recommends that the San Diego Mayor, City Council, and City Attorney consider investigating and determining ways of better informing the voting public on issues raised by the citizens' initiative process.

INTRODUCTION

This year marks the 107th year since the creation of the California citizens' initiative process, a system designed to allow voters to enact new laws, repeal current laws, and make changes to the State Constitution. Adopted in 1911 as a constitutional amendment, the state's initiative process gives the voters a power equal to that of the state legislature. This form of direct democracy was a response to the actions of moneyed interests, such as the railroad barons, who controlled the state government.

Comparable to the statewide initiative process, the California Legislature also created an "indirect initiative process" for city, county and district governments. Under state law these local initiatives will not be submitted to the voters unless the measure has (1) qualified through the signing of a petition by a certain percentage of the registered voters, and (2) been presented to the local legislative body but not acted upon by that body. Only then can the local initiative go to the voters for approval.

Over the years the initiative process at the state and local level has increased dramatically. Of particular note is the use of the local initiative to make complex land-use decisions. Although there are numerous pros and cons regarding the use of local initiatives to set land-use policy, the most striking criticism is the lack of independent, verifiable information and analysis of initiatives.

PROCEDURE

The Grand Jury reviewed:

- the San Diego City Charter
- the San Diego Municipal Code

- legal treatises and opinions regarding California Charter Cities

The Grand Jury interviewed individuals with knowledge of the initiative process.

DISCUSSION

Background

There are no provisions in the San Diego City Charter or the San Diego Municipal Code that require the city to analyze the potential economic and societal impacts of an initiative. Likewise there is nothing in the Charter or the Municipal Code prohibiting such an extensive and informative report. As a Charter City, San Diego may regulate its own initiative processes.

The San Diego City Charter and the San Diego Municipal Code govern the placement of measures on city ballots. Under these provisions, when a certified citizens' initiative is presented to the City of San Diego, the city has two options: (1) adopt the initiative/ordinance without alteration; or (2) order an election to submit the initiative/ordinance to the voters without alteration.

Voters often receive inadequate information about initiatives and as a result have low levels of awareness and knowledge about them. One critical problem with initiatives today is that they are difficult for the average voter, or even the more knowledgeable voter, to understand the issues and policy choices as they are presented on the ballot and in the voter pamphlet. The lack of available, well-disseminated, and accurate information has been said to be a generic problem of direct democracy, particularly of initiatives.

In 2009, the California Supreme Court ruled that public agencies may generally publish a fair representation of facts relevant to an election matter. The Court went on to state that the information must provide an accurate, fair, and impartial presentation of relevant facts in order to aid voters in reaching an informed judgment regarding the ballot measure. In support of its findings, the Court stated that Government Code §54964, which prohibits public funds from being used for or against an initiative, does not prohibit a public agency from using public funds to provide educational information to the public about a ballot measure.

How should local governments implement reforms in order to provide fair and unbiased information to voters about issues raised by initiatives? The Grand Jury recommends that San Diego alter how it handles initiatives by providing voters a more complete analysis of initiatives beyond the fiscal impact an initiative may have on the city and its citizens.

The Type of Information To Be Provided

California Election Code, §§9200 – 9226, provides a very usable example of how local governments can analyze citizens' initiatives. Section 9212 provides a model of what a city can do when providing an impartial analysis of an initiative and how it will affect a city. Specifically, section 9212(a) states that a legislative body (city, county government, district, etc.) may refer a proposed initiative to any city agency or agencies for a report on any or all of the following:

1. Its fiscal impact
2. Its effect on the internal consistency of the city's general and specific plan

3. Its effect on the use of land, the impact on the availability and location of housing
4. Its impact on funding for infrastructure of all types
5. Its impact on the community's ability to attract and retain business and employment
6. Its impact on the uses of vacant land
7. Its impact on agricultural land, open space, traffic congestion, existing business districts, and developed areas designated for revitalization
8. Any other matters the legislative body requests to be in the report

San Diego Municipal Code §27.0501, et. seq. outlines how ballot measures are to be prepared for voter review and what information may be included on the ballot. Section 27.0504 explains how a ballot measure is to be titled and how a ballot statement is to be prepared. However, the content of a ballot statement is not specified, except that it is limited to 500 words.

A review of several years of San Diego citizens' initiative ballot statements prepared by the City Attorney found that such statements discussed only the fiscal impact of the initiative.

Besides the fiscal impact a ballot measure may have on a city and its residents, a review of initiatives submitted to voters indicates that such measures also impact a city's general and specific planning processes, including zoning, housing, transportation infrastructure, and traffic congestion. Also impacted is the ability of the city to attract and maintain business and employment in current business districts and areas designated for revitalization. Such issues not only have a fiscal impact on a city but also significant effects on the quality of life of its residents.

Means of Providing Information to the Voters

The City of San Diego has departments and employees who routinely provide analysis and evaluation of issues confronting the city, including the City Attorney, City Auditor, and an Independent Budget Analyst. Each of these offices is charged to provide the city and the public with unbiased and impartial analysis of issues facing the city. With such resources available as well as the model of section 9212, the voting public can be provided valuable information on any issue raised by an initiative.

In 2014, the California State Legislature revised the State Election Code to better inform the voting public on initiatives set for a statewide vote. The Ballot Initiative Transparency Act of 2014 ("BITA"), had the express intent of:

- providing voters with more useful information so they are able to make informed decisions about an initiative measure
- providing a voter-friendly explanation of each initiative measure
- identifying and correcting flaws in an initiative measure before it appears on the ballot.

BITA requires the Secretary of State to give access to information about the initiative measure on an internet site. Such a website must include a plain language summary of the initiative measure, including who supports or opposes the measure, how, and who is financing the initiative measure.

The Grand Jury believes the Ballot Initiative Transparency Act of 2014 provides an excellent model on how local municipalities and districts can reform their election codes to better inform the voting public. The establishment of a comment period at the local level could be done through a series of public hearings where the public and its elected officials explore the issues raised by the initiative, thus providing a forum for comment and deliberation not available under the current initiative process.

If city leaders pursue such an information process, then direct democracy will not only flourish but, most importantly, become a positive, constructive contributor to the city government process.

FACTS AND FINDINGS

Fact: Voters often lack available, well-disseminated, and accurate information on ballot initiatives.

Finding 01: The democratic process will work well when the voters receive reliable, verifiable, and objective information.

Finding 02: The California Election Code §9212 and the Ballot Initiative Transparency Act of 2014 provide an example for municipalities in evaluating the potential impacts of ballot initiatives.

Finding 03: The new California Election Code provides a model of how an extended period of review and analysis can provide unbiased and educational information to the voting public.

Fact: Government Code §54964 does not prohibit a local government from providing unbiased information in order to educate the voters on a ballot measure.

Finding 04: The City of San Diego may use public funds to educate the voters in an unbiased and informative way on issues raised by initiatives.

RECOMMENDATION

The 2017/2018 San Diego County Grand Jury recommends the City of San Diego Mayor, the San Diego City Council and the San Diego City Attorney:

18-20: Consider a standard practice of commissioning a report through city agencies to detail the possible impact of an initiative on the city.

REQUIREMENTS AND INSTRUCTIONS

 - (3) The recommendation requires further analysis, with an explanation and the scope and parameters of an analysis or study, and a time frame for the matter to be prepared for discussion by the officer or head of the agency or department being investigated or reviewed, including the governing body of the public agency when applicable. This time frame shall not exceed six months from the date of publication of the grand jury report.
 - (4) The recommendation will not be implemented because it is not warranted or is not reasonable, with an explanation therefor.
- (c) If a finding or recommendation of the grand jury addresses budgetary or personnel matters of a county agency or department headed by an elected officer, both the agency or department head and the Board of Supervisors shall respond if requested by the grand jury, but the response of the Board of Supervisors shall address only those budgetary or personnel matters over which it has some decision making authority. The response of the elected agency or department head shall address all aspects of the findings or recommendations affecting his or her agency or department.
