“Help Make Their Life Brighter”: IHSS Caregiving Brings Meaning

By Jennifer Bransford-Koons
Director, Aging & Independence Services

It may not be up there with “professional baseball player” or “ballerina” as a coveted childhood dream career, but more and more San Diego County residents are discovering that working as a professional caregiver can be a meaningful way to earn a living and help people in need. Maria del Pilar Torres is one such person who landed unexpectedly in the role as an In-Home Supportive Services (IHSS) caregiver and fell in love with the profession.

IHSS is a statewide program that allows eligible older adults, persons with disabilities, and those who are blind to remain living safely in their own home and avoid out-of-home placement. IHSS recipients (also known as clients) are evaluated by a social worker and may be approved to receive assistance with the basic needs that they are not able to perform independently, such as cleaning the house, laundry, preparing meals, bathing, grooming, and getting dressed, to name a few. Through the program, IHSS recipients can select a caregiver of their choice, including family members or friends (provided they meet a few basic requirements and pass a Department of Justice background check). Professional caregivers, also known as providers, may be selected from a registry as well. Currently, over 41,800 caregivers in the county serve as IHSS caregivers.

Many IHSS caregivers initially work in other careers before discovering the caregiving field. Maria had been working as a physical therapist in Tijuana. After she and her husband relocated to San Diego, Maria’s physical therapy career stalled as she would need to pursue an alternative certification to have an active license. While she took the necessary classes—and her instructors were impressed with her expertise—they suggested that she strengthen her English skills before working in a clinical setting. Soon after, in June 2022, an acquaintance approached Maria about serving as a caregiver for her father who was enrolled in IHSS and needed a caregiver.

At first, Maria wasn’t sure, but her husband encouraged her to go to the interview. The client’s two daughters were eager for her assistance and carefully explained their father’s needs. Maria agreed to take the job. She explains, “When you see the real need of someone, you...learn that you have a part of you that is willing to help. You don’t know how you will start, but you know you have to show up.”

And show up she did. Maria brought her whole self to serve her client. While there was a lot to learn about her client’s needs—he was unable to complete any activities of daily living on his own—she quickly discovered a “ton of satisfaction” helping to maintain his health.

Maria regularly went above and beyond, making it a priority to provide more than just physical care; she looked for ways to support his social and emotional needs, too, often using her own resources or personal time to improve her client's quality of life. For instance, one day her client gestured at his room and its four walls noting, "This is all I see." Maria looked for ways to bring him more mental stimulation in his environment. She hung posters on the walls to add variety to the room. In addition, she sought to keep him entertained. Maria tapped into her 20 years of Folkloric dance experience and would sing and dance for him, gently holding his hands so that he too could be a participant. When the holidays came around, Maria made arrangements with her client's family to use her own time to visit him on Christmas as well as for Día de Los Reyes on January 6. Maria explains, "You do it so you can help make their life brighter...so their life won't be [as] difficult...[or] lonely."

After her first client eventually succumbed to his illness and passed away, Maria felt the loss deeply. She admits that the hardest part of being a caregiver is "learning how to let your [terminally ill] clients go with love." After the loss, she comforted herself with the knowledge that she made a difference in his life and that her client was no longer in pain.

After work with her first client ended, Maria decided to join the IHSS Provider Registry. She also enrolled as a caregiver for the Back-Up Provider System (BUPS)—a program designed to assist IHSS recipients with urgent, short-term personal care assistance when a recipient's regular caregiver is not available to assist.

Today, Maria is happily serving another long-term client, providing approximately 40 hours of care per week. This client is able to perform some activities independently, but Maria provides support with food preparation, medication management, and some personal care and household assistance. She brings an attitude of positivity to her job and helps her client to recognize the things he still can do, such as listen to the radio, watch tv, and enjoy his meals.

While Maria didn't envision her career path would lead her to caregiving, she is "so happy" in her current role. Maria encourages caring people who enjoy helping others to consider serving as an IHSS caregiver. She shares, "Sometimes you have to give a lot of yourself, so the people you are taking care of don't suffer and can be the best they can be...but you can also have this amazing connection with a client."

ELDER ABUSE AWARENESS

ELDER ABUSE AWARENESS AND PREVENTION: BUILDING STRONG SUPPORT FOR ELDERS

The International Network for the Prevention of Elder Abuse and the World Health Organization at the United Nations (UN) launched the first World Elder Abuse Awareness Day (WEAAD) on June 15, 2006 in an effort to unite communities around the world in raising awareness about elder abuse.

When we come together, we can prevent elder abuse from happening and also put supportive services in place to address elder abuse. California law defines elder abuse as physical abuse, neglect, financial exploitation, abandonment, isolation, abduction, or other treatment resulting in harm, pain, or mental suffering to an adult 60 years or older. Every year an estimated 1 in 10 older Americans are victims of elder abuse, neglect, or exploitation. We can increase social supports for older adults through services, programs, and policies that keep people integrated into our communities as we age.

TAKE ACTION!

- Keep in contact and talk with your older friends, neighbors, and relatives frequently. Ask questions and listen. Be aware and alert for the possibility of abuse.
- Make a commitment to volunteer this year! Help older adults in your community. Consider participating in a friendly caller/visitor program or send cards and letters to nursing homes or socially isolated adults in the community.
- Give a caregiver a respite break.
- Ask your church or organization to add information about elder abuse in their newsletters or during a service.
- Share elder abuse prevention and awareness information via social media with your friends and family.
- Be alert for scams and share scam prevention information. The Don't Get Hooked scam prevention booklet is available on the Adult Protective Services page of the AIS website in English, Spanish, Tagalog, Arabic, Vietnamese, Farsi, Korean, Mandarin, and Somali. Share this important information with others!

SEEK HELP

If you have concerns about an older adult, or suspect possible elder abuse, call the AIS Call Center at (800) 339-4661. If you are an older adult, one of the best ways to avoid becoming a victim of elder abuse is to stay connected to others. Explore the Get Connected Guide for social engagement ideas. For more information about opportunities to stay connected through health promotion and volunteer programs, access to transportation, or phone call reassurance programs, visit www.aging.sandiegocounty.gov or call (800) 339-4661.

MAY IS MENTAL HEALTH MONTH

One in five Americans experience a mental health condition each year. It can happen to any one of us: forty-six percent (46%) of U.S. adults meet the criteria for a diagnosable mental health condition in their lifetime. In a world where mental health challenges affect millions, awareness is just the beginning. This year's theme for May is Mental Health month is "Turn Awareness into Action." You have the power to take charge of your own mental health. By taking actions to help yourself, you can create a ripple effect, inspiring others and contributing to a society where mental health is prioritized and supported. Try these ways to take action today:

1. Start with Self-Care: Take a quick, anonymous test at mhascreening.org to check on your mental health. Try different types of self-care: take a walk, try art or another creative activity, or start a meditation practice.
2. Seek professional help for your mental health when self-help efforts aren't working. Doing so is a sign of strength, not weakness. You don't have to go through struggles alone.
3. Engage Your Community. Share your story with other people.
4. Advocate for Change. Educate others about the importance of mental health care in your community. Contact your elected officials to support legislation increase mental health services, expands access to treatment, and protects the rights of people with mental health conditions.
