CONTACT TRACING is a private and confidential process that helps to identify people who may also become ill due to CLOSE CONTACT with someone who has tested positive for COVID-19. It helps stop the disease from spreading by identifying people who need to safely separate themselves from others and get connected to treatment, if needed.

If you have been identified as being a close contact:

1. You may receive a call from a public health worker.

   They will ask you a few questions and recommend next steps you can take. Your information will be kept private and confidential.

2. You may need to separate yourself from others.

   This includes separating yourself for up to 14 days from others, including members of your household when possible, to protect those around you.

3. A public health worker may offer ongoing support.

   They will stay in-touch with you to find out if you develop symptoms or need access to help. Your information will be kept private and confidential.

Answer the call and help stop the spread.
