I represent the Pacific Southwest Association of Realtors. Our organization's office in El Cajon has represented the East San Diego County Realtors for more than sixty years. Our association also has an office representing the South County, and an Office Representing Central San Diego. We recognize that the communities and the properties in these communities are each unique and have unique needs and therefore we provide different services and programming for each area. The east has rural communities, they have septic tanks, they have different fire and public safety needs and they have agriculture and massive open space. They share schools and they share County Sherrif services. The South is more urban with big urban communities and newly developed suburbs. The Central Area is governed by the City of San Diego, one of the largest cities in the country. The city of San Diego government is unique. They have big institutions and big city needs and the property is more urban. These areas have different schools, different public safety and different social services needs. Please consider this. Mixing up the areas of interest is wrong.
