I have lived in East County since 1959 with a few brief stays elsewhere. I currently reside in Lakeside but grew up in El Cajon. East County has it's own unique features and only one supervisor should oversee it's district. When people say they are from East County you know you share common ideas, interests and history. Only someone from East County understands that. Many of the areas are unincorporated. Some of the areas are cities in their own right. All have that small town feel to them and that's why it's important that they should have the same Supervisor who understands the issues. Things that happen in El Cajon overlap with Lakeside, Santee, La Mesa, Spring Valley and Lemon Grove. They don't stop at city boundaries. Even El Cajon that is a city has areas that are unincorporated. East County issues are not the same as Normal Heights or East San Diego or Encinitas. East County should remain in one District. Our supervisor was elected because he lives in East County and is aware of the issues in East County.
