To whom it may concern,

As a citizen of Santee and the San Diego East County, I feel like all of the maps that have been drawn are not representing the east county as a whole. The redistricting should not be that much different from what it is now with a little bit of expansion on all sides accounting for population. However, it seems that you have gone out of your way to split up the east county, combining it with areas closer to the coast or further north that have very different communities, socioeconomics, philosophies, and interests. We want representatives that live within our general area, who drives in our streets and knows what's going on in our community.

Please reconsider these maps. You should consider the maps that the real estate corelogic company uses dividing the county into 5 areas: central, north, south, east, and inland east.
