Please consider the agricultural community when redrawing the district maps. Agriculture in San Diego County is gradually diminishing for a variety of reasons, urban sprawl, high operating costs, and an increased regulatory climate. I believe it is important to maintain some open space in every community for aesthetic reasons and agriculture not only helps to do that but in addition provides jobs and tax revenue. We in farming are concerned that as agriculture in the county is slowly shrinking that our voice is becoming less effective year after year, an important voice that will preserve some of the beauty of the county for future generations to enjoy.
