It is important to note that citizens who live inland on acreage have little in common with those who live by the ocean on small lots.

The inland residents value space, serenity, and privacy. Those who live by the ocean value being around others, the excitement of city life and the ease of getting to places.

It is important that similar segments of the population remain together so that their ideals and lifestyles can be best represented by their elected officials.

When the two differing groups are clustered together, neither obtains the representation they need and both groups are not served well.

Of the maps viewed, number 11 seems to be the one that represents the differing segments of the population the best.

Thank you.
