Hello - I live in an area that is technically El Cajon but part of Rancho San Diego/Jamul where we deal with wild fires every season. If you were to break up this community our resources would be split with more urban areas that don't know how to handle the risks of fire management or would be forced to split their budget. My parents' home backs up to a major hillside that is cleared annually and I would hate to see budget for that that is allocated as part of being in a more rural district be split with a more urban area.
