Greetings. "In response to the rise of partisan gerrymandering, some states have chosen to turn over the job of redistricting to independent commissions. The U.S. Supreme Court ruled 5-4 that independent redistricting commissions are constitutional; transfer responsibility for redistricting from the state legislature to an independent commission.

To Achieve Equality of Voice and Representation, the most effective reforms to date have involved independent commissions, which now exist in California and Arizona and soon will be in effect in Ohio, Utah, and Michigan, among several other states."
