Hello. I'm a resident of Carlsbad and work in Oceanside and have a good understanding of both cities.

You must understand that North County has a distinct and separate identity that has developed over many decades.

We are a community of interest and it's important that we have one Supervisor District to represent both the cities and unincorporated communities of North County.

Oceanside is a great example. We have miles of beachfront, an older but now revitalizing urban core, dense housing in many neighborhoods – AND a rural, farming community on the northeastern side of the city.

Carlsbad and Oceanside are definitely connected, but so are Oceanside and Vista. And Oceanside and Bonsall. And Oceanside and Fallbrook.

As a Carlsbad resident, I know that city is also a mix of beachfront and suburban and rural. We have large housing communities but we also have large farms, including some of the big, historic strawberry farms in North County.

What unites these communities, the cities and the unincorporated areas, is a strong sense of being residents of North County. Not San Diego. Not East County. Not South Bay. We are North County

We are all fortunate to live in a county with distinct areas.

I urge you to respect our community of interest.

Please maintain a unified North County, represented by one County Supervisor.

Thank you very much
